COMMERCE

21. At all times relevant to this Complaint, the defendants have maintained a substantial course of trade in the offering for sale and sale of surplus distribution business ventures, in or affecting commerce, as "commerce" is defined in Section 4 of the FTC Act, 15 U.S.C. § 44.

THE DEFENDANTS' BUSINESS PRACTICES

22. Since at least 1996 and continuing thereafter, defendants have marketed and sold a surplus distribution business opportunity to consumers across the nation. Purchasers of the venture offered by WTA, UTA, IMG, and TGC ("WTA, et al.") pay an initial fee ranging from $6,995 to $7,950 to become affiliates in WTA, et al.'s network of surplus brokers. Defendants represent that these affiliates, or brokers, will have access to "exclusive" listings of overstocked merchandise for sale. Affiliates market the surplus goods by telephone and facsimile and receive a commission on any sales they make. WTA, et al. promise expert training, pre-qualified accounts, and everything an affiliate needs to operate a successful surplus brokerage business.

industry is a profitable industry free of ups and downs and one in which the "opportunities are limitless." Defendants' advertisements also portray the venture as a foolproof, turnkey business: "Men and women of all ages, working part-time or full time can be earning fees almost immediately."

27. Defendants also promote their business opportunity on their company websites, which claim that defendants' venture features "the best and most unique training and support program in the world." The websites portray the surplus industry as "[r]ecession-[p]roof" and "constantly expanding." Defendants also represent on their websites that eighty percent of the surplus merchandise offered through the venture is "name brand, first quality" merchandise with all of the manufacturers' original warranties and guarantees. The websites promise the mentoring of a trainer who earns "six figures" and who will "help you set-up every aspect of 2.5 decorate 2.5 deco

- 30. The promotional materials also often include a reference to Entrepreneur Magazine that consumers who purchase the opportunity will earn $103,000 annually. Defendants' brochures lure prospective purchasers with the promise that "there are no limitations to your earnings" from the business opportunity.
- 31. Within a week of sending the promotional package, a sales representative calls or emails the prospect to schedule an appointment for a detailed presentation of the business opportunity. During this presentation, the sales representative explains the basics of the surplus industry and highlights the purported advantages of becoming an affiliate in the company's network of surplus brokers.
- 32. Defendants' sales representatives frequently make express earnings claims during their sales presentations. Defendants tell potential consumers that they can expect to recoup their investment in two to four months. Defendants represent that there are current affiliates working part-time who earn between $35,000 to $40,000 and full-time affiliates who earn six-figure incomes.
- 33. Defendants do not provide any support for their earnings claims made in their websites, promotional materials, advertisements, or made by sales representatives to potential consumers on the telephone.
- 34. Consumers who purchase defendants' business opportunity do not earn six-figure incomes per year. In fact, consumers typically lose money on their investment, regardless of whether they work foods times Ty00 TD(our mo)Tji100 TDetl0 cma purchasing surplus merchandise. In the majority of other instances, consumers have found that the pre-qualified businesses either had never heard of the defendants or had requested that defendants' brokers refrain from contacting them in the future.

- 37. Defendant MP and its representatives promise, through written and oral statements to prospective purchasers, that brokers will obtain two hundred customers on their Blowout Bargains website.
- 38. In numerous instances, MP brokers failed to obtain the promised two hundred customers on their Blowout Bargains website.
- 39. Defendants and their representatives represent to prospective purchasers that defendants will provide all goods and services necessary for affiliates to operate their surplus business venture. The promised goods include, but are not limited to, hundreds of overstocked, name-brand goods that defendants store in their warehouses and ship directly to surplus purchasers. The promised services include, but are not limited to, training, support, and delivery of goods to surplus purchasers.
- 40. In numerous instances, defendants failed to provide the goods and services promised to potential purchasers.
- 41. If, after hearing the sales representative's detailed presentations, the prospect appears interested in pursuing the opportunity, the sales representative provides him or her with a list of references to contact. Defendants and their representatives represent to prospective purchasers that company-selected references are satisfied purchasers of one of the business ventures offered by defendants. These company-selected references typically tell consumers that they have purchased one of the defendants' business opportunities, and are making the amount of money that defendants represented they would make.
- 42. In numerous instances, the references either have not purchased the specified business opportunity from defendants or have not had the type of success they describe to prospective purchasers.

- 43. Once the prospect has had a chance to contact these company-selected references, the sales representative follows up again with a phone call. If the prospect expresses interest in purchasing the opportunity, the sales representative sends him or her a contract for review and signature.
- 44. Defendants have failed to provide prospective business opportunity purchasers with a basic disclosure document, as required by the Franchise Rule.
- 45. Neither defendants nor their representatives have a reasonable basis for the earnings claims they make.
- 46. Defendants and their representatives fail to disclose, in immediate conjunction with each earnings claim, and in a clear and conspicuous manner, that material which constitutes a reasonable basis for the claim is available to prospective franchisees.
- 47. Defendants and their representatives fail to provide prospective franchisees with earnings claim documents as prescribed by the Franchise Rule.
